FOG MAY BRING ZEPPELIN AND SUBMARINE ATTACKS

Rome, Oct. 5 .- The German newspapers continue to print items of news sent them from England. One of the latest newspapers received here from the German capital contains the following:

"It is difficult to say whether the British tremble more in fear of an enemy below the water or in the air after the exploit of the German submarine off the Hook of Holland. Now that foggy weather is beginning, and as the German submarines and torpedo bosts can steal out and attack big English battleships, which are visible a mile away, and be off before they are seen, the 'prudence' of the British sailors is growing daily.

"As to the danger from the air Zeppelins are expected everywhere, London is kept at night in semidarkness in the fear that the city may be made a target for the enemy's airships.

nationalities should or should not continue to exist in Europe.

He warned his hearers not to understand the German forces. But, he asked, suppose the war went in favor of the Allies, what measures would be taken to produce a Europe in which local feelings would be satisfied? If we were to avoid a long cycle of wars, the population of the smaller nationalities would have to be consulted as to their mode of government.
